NO. 8. This is a machine got up on an entirely new principle, different from anything over before offered to the public, and we confidently assert that for family use it has not an equal. It is very light and tasty, runs very rapidly, is almost notselves in its operation, and uses a stranger extended. It is so arranged as to be utterly lispossible for it to miss stitches. It has a tonation on bole sides, and carries a large supply of thread on the under spool. The motions are gained by two small cranks that run without perceptible noise. The two threads are worked in such a manneras never to pull both at the same time, and consequently, little liable to break. The seam is very stastic and the thread does not break the same two yet stastic and the thread does not break the same two yet stastic and the thread of the thread in washing.
